Once upon a time there was a sweet little girl. She walked through the woods to deliver food to her grandmother. On her way to her grandmother's house...

The beast made her consume her own grandmother’s flesh, teeth, and blood. She was feeling afraid. The beast made her get undressed, burn her clothes, and get into bed with him. Her grandmother's ears, eyes, hands, and mouth seemed to be unusual.

The beast ate the girl, helped her, and attacked the girl. The beast was killed by the huntsman and stones. The girl survived, but the beast was killed. In the end...

The end.

source: D. L. Ashliman's folktexts, a library of folktales, folklore, fairy tales, and mythology